

How fit are you for language learning?

A. Pack and Go!

You are a real go-getter! You are bold and confident and keen on adventures and exciting experiences. You probably don't worry too much about getting things exactly right before you try them out but rely on your instincts and gut feelings to get you through. This all means that you will be great at learning languages if you can see where they will get you in the big wide world. You probably prefer to learn by just picking things up from what you hear and see and although you might not study hard you will learn a lot by getting out there and having a go. So get packing and go learn the lingo!

B. Be a mate!

You are everyone's friend and love spending time with other people! You care a great deal about being part of the crowd and often find yourself acting as team leader. You take the view that a problem shared is a problem halved and will always talk to others before jumping into a situation that is new. Because you care about other people you always see the best in them and all of this will make you a really sociable language learner. You will probably learn best by talking (and listening) to other people and will enjoy discovering different ways of life through your friends in other countries. So make a new friend and get talking!

C. Work it out!

You are a quiet and thoughtful person with a real curiosity about how things work. You like to think before you speak and really know your own mind. You don't mind being on your own and don't have to have others around to think or act for you. Your analytical mind is a great asset for learning a language as it will help you work out the nuts and bolts of language and really understand how the language works. You may prefer to read and write rather than speak and may not be the most intrepid traveller but you can be sure that when you do open your mouth you will get what and where you want. So do some hard thinking and get to grips with language!
